

The 1-to-30 Map

How one 30-minute video becomes 30 pieces of content, in order, nothing skipped.

I run a video content agency. This is the exact map we run on every client episode, and the same one I use on my own channel. It works with any tools you already have. It just takes about 9 hours by hand (I timed it), which is why most people never do it consistently. The last page shows you exactly what to post on which day.

REPOSTS OF WINNERS

= 30 pieces of content from one recording

1 Publish the source

30 min

- Post the full episode to YouTube. Long-form is the asset everything else gets mined from.
- The title is the strongest single claim inside the episode, never a summary. "Why we stopped posting daily" beats "Episode 14: our content strategy."

2 Transcript before anything else

15 min

- Get a word-accurate transcript. Every step below is mining this document, not rewatching the video.
- Fix names and product words now. One pass, five minutes, saves an hour of cleanup later.

3 The clip pass: find these 6 moments

~3 hours

This is the step everyone wings, and it is why their clips flop. Read the transcript hunting for exactly these six moment types. Pull 8 clips total:

1. The contrarian take. Anywhere you disagree with common advice in your niche.
2. The number moment. Any list, stat, or "three things" beat. Numbers stop thumbs.
3. The story peak. Start 30 seconds before the payoff and end ON the payoff line.
4. The how-to nugget. One complete tactic that needs zero setup to understand.
5. The hot take. The sentence you almost cut because it felt too spicy. That one.
6. The receipt. Any proof, result, number, or before-and-after you mention.

Clip rules: 20 to 60 seconds. The hook lands in the first 2 seconds, so cut INTO the sentence, never into the wind-up. Captions on every clip, always. Vertical 9:16 for TikTok, Reels, and Shorts.

4 The text pass: 10 posts from the same transcript

~2 hours

- 3 insight posts. A belief you argued for, restated in 2 to 4 sentences.
- 3 tip posts. "Do X, then Y." One complete tactic each, no teasing.
- 2 quote posts. Verbatim lines from the episode, in quotation marks.
- 1 question post. The moment in the episode people would argue about. Ask it straight.
- 1 receipt post. The stat or result, with one line of context.

Platform rule: write X and LinkedIn versions natively. Same idea, different length and tone. Never paste one into the other.

5 Quote graphics

~1 hour

- Take your 2 quote posts plus the 3 strongest one-liners from the transcript. Five branded cards for Instagram and Facebook.
- One template, five swaps. Do not design five times.

6 The blog post and the newsletter

~2 hours

- Blog: restructure the transcript into one SEO post. The H2s are the episode's main points. This is the piece Google can find forever.
- Newsletter: the best story from the episode, one takeaway, one link to the full video. Short wins.

7 Schedule all 30: the cadence grid

~45 min

One episode fills a month. Here is the grid we use. Rule: never two of the same format back to back, and week 4 re-runs the winners from weeks 1 to 3.

	Mon	Tue	Wed	Thu	Fri	Sat	Sun
Wk 1	Long-form	Clip 1	Insight 1	Graphic 1	Clip 2	Tip 1	off
Wk 2	Clip 3	Quote 1	Blog post	Clip 4	Insight 2	Graphic 2	off
Wk 3	Newsletter	Clip 5	Tip 2	Graphic 3	Clip 6	Question	off
Wk 4	Clip 7	Insight 3	Graphic 4	Clip 8	Receipt + Tip 3	Quote 2 + Graphic 5	off

Week 4 bonus: repost the single best clip and best text post from earlier in the month. That is pieces 29 and 30, and they will outperform most of the new stuff. Winners are winners.

Total by hand: about 9 hours per episode. That is the real reason consistency dies. It is not discipline. It is a part-time job.

The honest pitch, one paragraph: this map is tool-agnostic and it works exactly as written. It is also what my software does automatically. VidFlow runs steps 2 through 7 from one upload: transcript, clips (through your OpusClip key), text posts written in your trained brand voice, graphics concepts, and the schedule, with a no-login approval link if a client needs to sign off first. The 9 hours becomes about 20 minutes of review. We are onboarding in waves at vidflow.io, and you are on the list.
